Career Choices

I knew I was interested in Computer Science but this really helped me narrow down from a wide range of careers to just a couple. It also gave me a look at their availability in the area, salaries and job requirements. I spent a little while in Indeed looking at job openings and what the average job said in its bio and what else they wanted from me. It was very interesting and I did some of it with my mom. Some of the jobs made me wish I had a degree now so I could apply! It was a very good teaching tool and helped me cross out a couple of jobs too.

Wealth category. Not necessarily the money aspect as I'm 29 surviving on 25k a year right now but the time with family, alone, working with people I enjoy and overall stress of position. If I'm making a lot of money but miserable everyday or passing out the second I get home, what is the point of the money? I don't really care about travel but location is important too. I'd prefer less than an hour commute cus I saw how that killed my mom when I was a kid when she had a 3 hour round trip commute a day. I'd prefer a suburb with a smallish city nearby that I can work in. Like Bellevue and living in Redmond or Kirkland.
